Investment Advisor's Assessment

Market

August was a volatile month on the Russian markets, with the next result being a slight increase. Oil was very steady at just under $70 a barrel, but the market overreacted to every shift in economic sentiment and the potential effect on commodities prices. At the beginning of the month, the feeling that the worst of the economic crisis was indeed behind us was not particularly strong; it had grown much stronger by the end of the month. Some of the volatility was undoubtedly due to lower volumes during the traditional summer vacation month. The remainder of this year should be quite interesting – and positive.

Fund

In August, the Fund continued showing its tremendous strength. It outperformed most other funds and significantly outperformed the index average, in particular the MSCI Russia index which rose 2.4%. As a result, its Sharpe ratio continued to improve significantly and its return since inception continues to outpace comparable funds. The Fund's cash position continued to drop in August. From June through August, the Fund's aggregate outperformance compared to the RTS was 19 percentage points and 15 percentage points against the MSCI. It outperformed the average of comparable funds by over 4 percentage points.

It is now safe to say that at no point in time during the crisis did early Tera investors see the value of their investment turn negative.

September First Look

September is defying the rampant rumors in the Russian market in June and July of a "second wave". The markets are off to a very solid start and some of Tera's underlying funds are already up more than 10% as investors return from vacation and as the worst of the economic crisis genuinely appears to be behind us. Perhaps most importantly, Russian markets are advancing nicely notwithstanding a slight weakness in the price of oil. This is critical as it means that investors are now once again looking at Russian companies on their individual merits, as opposed to viewing the Russian market as a whole as an alternate oil play.
